FDA reverses "Aspirin-a-day" recommendation

New study reports 190% risk of heart attack. Aspirin users warned of bone loss

By Chad Cole, Field Reporter

BALTIMORE, MD—Taking a daily aspirin to prevent a heart attack may just give you one. That's what scientists at the Southampton University in the U.K and Masstricht University in the Netherlands discovered.

Researchers examined 30,000 patients with rapid and irregular heartbeats. They found aspirin-a-day users 1.9 times more likely to suffer an acute heart attack. This was compared to those who took warfarin, a vitamin K antagonist.

"We identified an ... increased risk of [heart attacks] among current and past aspirin users" said study

Daily aspirin increases health risk according to clinical studies leader Dr. Leo Stolk. "There also exists doubt about the usefulness of aspirin in atrial fibrillation. In new guidelines, aspirin is no longer
